Poster Presentation Report

The Department of Economics organized a Poster Presentation Activity for B.A. students with the objective of enhancing analytical thinking, academic skills, and subject understanding. The event provided students with an opportunity to visually present economic concepts, develop communication skills, and engage in collaborative learning.

A group of students presented posters on various themes such as Demand Forecasting Methods, Consumer Behaviour, and Personal Financial Planning. These posters included detailed explanations, tabular data, and real-life examples that highlighted students' comprehension of the subject matter. The activity helped students explore economic topics creatively and present information in a systematic and academically structured manner.

Faculty members from the Department motivated students and evaluated their presentations based on content accuracy, clarity, creativity, and presentation skills. The interaction between teachers and students during the session contributed to enriching the learning environment.

The poster presentation successfully achieved its objectives by developing students' confidence and enhancing their subject knowledge. The Department plans to conduct similar activities in future to encourage experiential and participatory learning among students.
