INDIAN SATELLITE

Indian National Satellite System (INSAT)

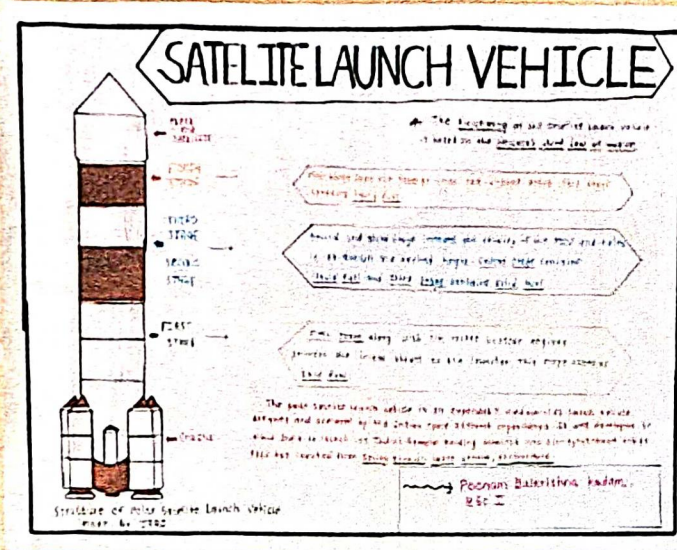

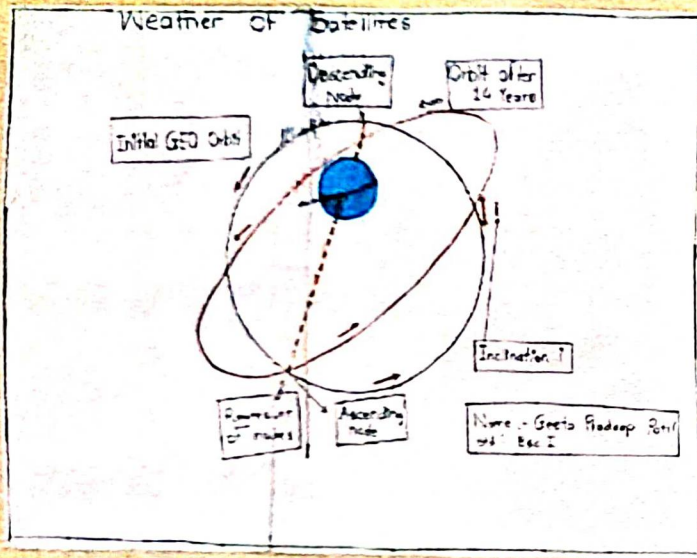

It was launched on 10 April, 1982. The system was for the communication, broadcasting and meteorology. On April 2, 1984 the first Indo-Soviet manned space mission was launched. Rakesh Sharma became the 1st Indian citizen to go into space.

First Satellite of India:
 The first satellite of India was Aryabhata. It was launched by ISRO on 19 April 1975. For launching it, 2000 kg of liquid propellant was used. The satellite was launched into a mission on orbitation of 6 months.
 It was completely designed by a Soviet scientist. The satellite was launched on April 19, 1975.

Uses of Indian Satellites:
 The Indian National Satellite System or INSAT, is a series of multi-purpose geostationary satellites launched by ISRO to satisfy the telecommunication, broadcasting, meteorology and ocean and weather operations.
 Commissioned in 1983, INSAT is the largest domestic communication system in the Indian region.

Artificial Satellite Importance:-

Getting direction, weather, telecommunication, monitoring the weather, conducting scientific research - services from low Earth-orbiting satellites to numerous artificial satellites in orbit around Earth.

The satellite, satellites used to take pictures of the earth, to know geographical features, which are used to predict the weather, to know the distance between two places, to know the population, etc.

Artificial satellite is a man-made body placed in orbit around the earth to provide services to users to collect information about the earth and communication purposes.

Types of artificial satellites:-

- 1) Geostationary Satellite
- 2) Polar Satellite

Uses of artificial satellites in our daily life:-

- 1) Communication
- 2) Navigation
- 3) Weather Forecasting
- 4) Collecting information about other planets and outer space.
