- As it is not long term preservative so this sample should be preserved in 4 % formaldehyde.
- Sample is allowed to keep for a day or more to ensure complete sedimentation of planktons. ( If sedimentation is of fixed volume which will give population of Planktons per lit. volume of water).
- After collection and sedimentation take a drop of sediment on a glass slide and observe under compound microscope.
- Identify the planktons by using standard literature or key.

Result:
The given freshwater sample contains different species of Zooplanktons.

Conductivity meter:

The meter is equipped with a probe, usually handheld, for field or on-site measurements. After the probe is placed in the liquid to be measured, the meter applies voltage between two electrodes inside the probe. Electrical resistance from the solution causes a drop in voltage, which is read by the meter. The meter converts this reading to milli- or micromhos or milli- or microSiemens per centimeter. This value indicates the total dissolved solids. Total dissolved solids is the amount of solids that can pass through a glass-fiber filter. An electrical conductivity meter (EC meter) measures the electrical conductivity in a solution.

Significance:

It has multiple applications in research and engineering, with common usage in hydroponics, aquaculture, aquaponics, and freshwater systems to monitor the amount of nutrients, salts or impurities in the water.

The calibrated conductivity meter has the efficiency to measure the TDS in any solution.

The amount of current that can flow through a solution is proportional to the concentration of dissolved ionic species in the solution. Thus, higher the concentration of electrolytes in the water, the more is the electrical conductivity i. e. lesser the resistance.
